Dear Livestock Producer,

As the population of gray wolves increases in California, conflicts between wolves and livestock are inevitable and financial losses to producers will increase. We understand that livestock losses caused by wolf predation as well as the potential for indirect losses can result in economic losses to ranchers, and can, at times, be severe locally.

We understand that the direct financial loss of or injury to livestock is only a portion of the impacts experienced when wolf predation occurs. The California Department of Fish and Wildlife (CDFW) has recently launched their Interim Wolf Livestock Loss Compensation Grant Program, however the CDFW program currently only covers losses that occurred after September 23, 2021.

California Wolf Foundation (CWF) has been fundraising to establish a livestock loss grant fund to help offset some of the direct financial losses caused by wolf activity (confirmed and probable wolf depredations as documented by CDFW resulting in direct mortality, required euthanasia, and direct costs [vet bills or producer-provided treatment] associated with injuries). We will rely on CDFW reports to verify losses and to confirm producers linked to reports, but CDFW has no other involvement in our program or grant determination decisions.

We are launching our livestock loss compensation program and are now accepting applications for grants to offset wolf-caused livestock mortalities and injury treatment costs that occurred within California prior to September 23, 2021.

If you have experienced losses from wolf predation, we encourage you to apply to participate in our livestock loss program.

Please don't hesitate to contact me with questions or concerns- I value your input and would love to hear from you to find out how this program can best serve you.

Sincerely,

Frequently Asked Questions

Q: What is the California Wolf Foundation?

A: The California Wolf Foundation (CWF) is a non-profit charitable organization (tax EIN 87-3467885; 501(c)(3) tax exempt) established in 2021 with the mission of reducing conflict with wolves in California and supporting research and funding for wolf/livestock conflict deterrent tools and methods.

Q: How much compensation can I request?

A: We intend to compensate producers at fair market value. Also, we understand that some producers will treat injured animals themselves and thus will not have records of costs incurred. As such, if producers do not or cannot provide documentation or explanation of fair market value or direct costs incurred we offer a simple flat valuation they may use:

- Cow (older than one year) or steer mortality: $1,200
- Calf mortality or required euthanasia: $850

Q: Are Injuries or vet bills included in the reimbursement program?

A: Yes. Grants for injuries/vet bills may be capped at a portion of the flat value of a mortality for the animal. Applicants may provide documentation to support a higher market value than the flat value which will be considered by our Board of Directors on a case-by-case basis and as funds are available, however calculation and documentation is not required to apply. For applications where this information cannot be provided, we will apply a portion of the flat value above.

Q: Is the California Wolf Foundation open to suggestions/feedback?

A: We are not agricultural professionals as you are, so we welcome suggestions on how we can best support affected livestock producers with this program. We acknowledge that no livestock loss program will be perfect, that these programs can be controversial, and that they do not address the full impacts experienced by our valued agricultural producers and land stewards operating in wolf inhabited areas. However, we are hoping our efforts can help to alleviate some of the added costs to the agricultural community resulting from conflicts with wolves.
